Epstein estimated that this transaction had saved $600 million in value and Black appears to have agreed with that estimate. Outside counsel stated that this was a complicated transaction that took approximately nine months to plan and execute.

Witnesses noted that there was a dispute following this transaction over whether Epstein had come up with the idea for this transaction on his own or if the transaction had first been proposed by outside counsel. Outside counsel stated that this transaction did not originate from Epstein but that Epstein had nevertheless played an instrumental role in completing it. The extent of Epstein's role in this transaction led to a dispute over Epstein's fees, which is described more fully below. C. Other Estate Planning Advice Leveraging his success on th

However, it is clear that the compensation paid by Black to Epstein far exceeded any amounts Black paid to his other professional advisors. V. 01.ACR' LOANED `30.5 MILLION TO EPSTEIN` `Separate from the payments made to Epstein or his entities between 2013 and 2017 for services rendered, Black made two loans to` `Epstein, for` 22.5 million and $8 million, respectively, in early 2017. These two loans were negotiated and documented by legal counsel. The loans were structured as being made by BV70 LLC, an entity owned by Black, to Plan D LLC, an entity owned by Epstein. These loans were payable on demand from BV 70 LLC, were intended to be short-term loans and were made in connection with an art transaction involving Epstein. EFTA02731012

IDechert Apollo Conflicts Committee January 22, 2021 L L P Page 18 Black demanded repayment of the loans in full in early 2018. In response, Epstein repaid only $10 million of the outstanding amount. The remaining balance of the loans remained unpaid at the time of Epstein's death, despite Black's repeated demands for repayment in full during 2018. VI. BLACK AND EPSTEIN MADE CHARITABLE DONATIONS AT EACH OTHERS' REQUESTS Throughout their relationship, Black and Epstein each donated to charitable causes and encouraged each other to donate to charitable causes. For example, on at least two occasions, Epstein made significant donations to the Melanoma Research Alliance, a charitable foundation established by Black and his wife, at Black's request. Similarly, Black made donations at Epstein's request to various scientific and
